* Traditionally, “amber” refers to amberggris, a waxy substance produced in the stomach of sperm whales that is prized for its use in perfumery and is sometimes used as a spice. Because it is relatively rare, much “amber” sold today is probably a similarly textured assortment of pleasant-smelling resins from plant sources.

* Wormwood, also known as absinthe, is a strong-smelling herb that is used as a spice and for medicinal purposes.
